up3, how to install windows 10 on acer laptop Is there a place for 'ordinary' conservatives to express their views on the Internet? There certainly is in the world of the 'Cuckervative', who is so much more colourful and less prissy than his regular conservative counterpart. The following is a long excerpt from the book An Educated Person's Guide to the Alt-Right, by Dr. Greg Johnson. So now we've arrived at the point where our cuckservative friends come into the picture. Let's make clear up front that, like the Mensheviks, these are not people who think they are good and others are bad. These are not people who want to be "more inclusive". These are not people who would want to create a society where everyone can live happily together. Rather, these are the people who want to limit social conflict by stopping the fight on all fronts. These are the people who would, in a sort of left-wing version of the American 'Mamma' or the British 'Mummy', say, "Stop all this fighting. Just make sure we don't hurt each other." So it's not because they are good or virtuous that these people can be identified. Rather, they are those who either a) prefer not to fight when they can possibly avoid it, or b) prefer to forget about the unpleasantness that fighting might bring about. These are the people who would prefer not to be angry. They prefer to live in a mild-mannered, sleep-in-your-mom's-lap sort of universe. It's nothing personal. It's just that they can't stand it. Let's try and understand these cuckservatives: these are not the Tea Party types who are so busy scaring the crap out of anyone who might be considered remotely conservative. They are the ones who would be just as happy to sign on to a Democrat-sponsored amnesty and a no-child tax credit as they are to support a Republican who opposes a no-child tax credit. These are the people who would like nothing more than to have conservatives spend their time campaigning against police. These are the people who want nothing more than for them to stop fighting. They want to see the America they love die. And, just like the communist Bolsheviks, these are people who would sooner see a country torn apart than not see it torn apart. And just like the Bolsheviks, their ultimate goal is to have the masses overthrow 82157476af
